N'Mah and Aicha Keita

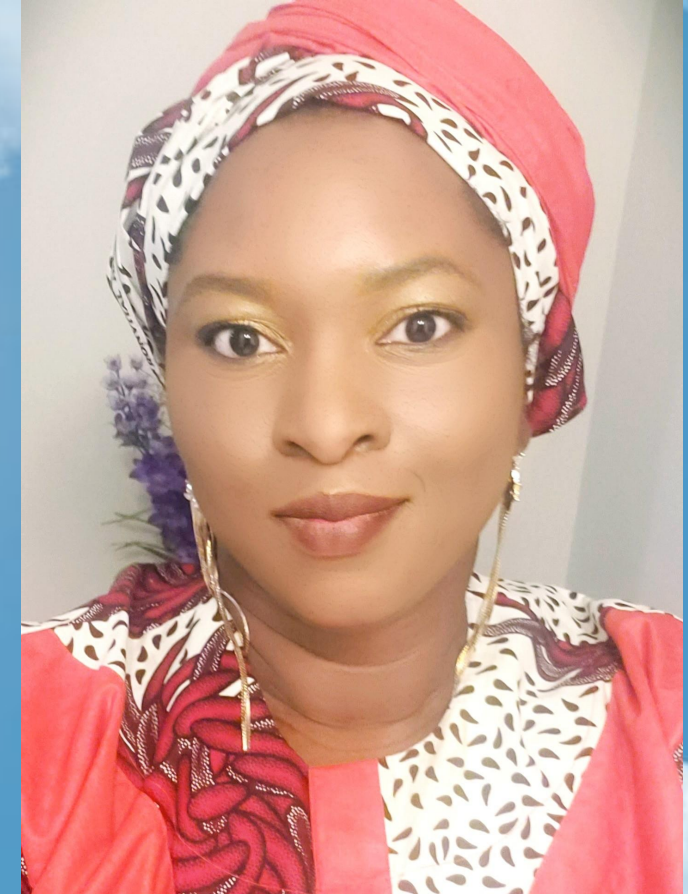

N'Mah Keita

N'Mah Keita has over two decades of dedicated public service experience with a career that spans roles at the U.S. Departments of State, Homeland Security, and Health and Human Services; and is a founding member of "Wells of Hope Africa" an organization committed to bringing clean and accessible water to impoverished communities. She currently serves on the board as the Vice President of Wings of Hope.

Aicha Keita

Aicha Keita is the daughter of N'Mah and former student of David Weeks. Together they collaborated to fundraise for the first well and water distribution center. From this project and association with the Guinean village she supported, Aicha was inspired to commit to a career in public health and political science. She is presently studying at Tulane University in New Orleans, Louisiana.

Investment Benefits

The Ripple Effect of Building Wells in Guinea

Investing in wells creates life-changing impacts far beyond access to water:

- Health Transformation:
 - Deep wells provide cleaner water, reducing waterborne parasites.
 - Lower rates of diarrhea, typhoid, hepatitis, cholera, and dysentery.
 - Reduces long-term damage to the gastrointestinal, neurological, and reproductive systems, saves lives and fosters human potential.
- Education and Opportunity:
 - Fewer missed school days
 - Economic opportunities for families and future generations
- Stronger Livelihoods:
 - Healthier animals; better milk production and livestock consumption.
 - Better crops; food security; market opportunities for communities.
- Community Empowerment:
 - Each well uplifts community by improving health, education, and economic futures.

Each investment builds a foundation for sustainable growth and empowered communities.
